About Corpas na Gàidhlig

A question to be asked is why so? McCormick was a young man, the manager of the quarries was an Englishman named Spence. She was, however, highly respected, not least by directors such as Robert Hamer, Charles Frend and Alexander Mackendrick and by the scriptwriter T.

January

It is the chapters featuring this resistance which represent the most successful and convincing part of the novel, drawing as they did on events during the Land Agitation period of the 1880s. For example, the name of the Tormore Quarry firm was The Shap Granite and Patent Concrete Company Limited — I did not have this elsewhere. Further evidence of tension between MacFarlane and An Comunn — with Angus Robertson on its Executive Council — is evidenced in the speech made by Malcolm MacLeod, President of An Comunn Gaidhealach at the 1913 Mòd in which he heralded An t-Ogha Mòr as the first Gaelic novel, eliciting an acerbic response from MacFarlane who observed It is a pity these things cannot be better managed.
