Hebrew and Judeo

. There are many editions of the Mishnaic treatise Avot and of the Passover Hagadah, most with Judeo-Arabic sharh. A small number of Hebrew and Judeo-Arabic books were printed during and after the War.

Hebrew and Judeo

A few woodcut illustrations include a man blessing wine, a sailboat, a table laden with fruits and vegetables. There is one edition of the Passover Hagadah with Judeo-Persian translation.

Dangoor, who also used presses and type imported from Europe, was the most productive of the Baghdad printers, issuing over 100 books largely edited by himself. Hutsin's catalogue of 1872 was the first Hebrew bookseller's catalogue printed anywhere in the Orient. During the British Mandate, several new Hebrew presses were established, notably El Wataniyah Israiliyah, and the press of Elisha Shohet which functioned until 1940.

Hebrew and Judeo

Two of the most curious of the Baghdad imprints are scrolls, among the few instances in Hebrew booklore of printed Esther scrolls, once prohibited by the rabbis. The books in the Sassoon collection, together with those in the Jewish National and University Library in Jerusalem as of 1940, served as the basis for Yaari's Hebrew Printing in the East.
