All this was in preparation of another campaign in 649 with forces totaling 300,000, but Taizong died before this campaign and the campaign was stalled into Gaozong's reign. Taizong removed him from the position of heir apparent and chose as his successor Li Zhi, who embraced Han Chinese cultural heritage. Two months later, with Li Shimin firmly in control of power, Emperor Gaozu yielded the throne to him as Emperor Taizong.

In fall 639, Emperor Taizong created a Turkish prince who had served him faithfully, Li Simo né Ashina Simo as the khan of a newly recreated as , giving him all of the Turks and who had surrendered as his subordinates, to be settled north of the and the Yellow River. Emperor Gaozu agreed and allowed Li Shimin to continue to siege Luoyang. China was, by this point, roughly united under Tang rule.
