His tutor was , afterwards known as the martyrologist, who lived with him and his brother and sisters at the castle of Reigate. From 1924, the 17th Viscount resided at , which was sold by his grandson, the 18th Viscount, in 1972.

Thomas Howard, 4th Duke of Norfolk (1536)

In 1546, , fell out of favour with the dying Henry and was attainted on 27 January 1547; he was stripped of his titles and his lands reverted to the Crown. The viscountcy of Hereford is the senior viscountcy in the.

Duke of Norfolk

Norfolk made no secret of his intense dislike for Leicester, which of course did not make him popular with Elizabeth. Parliament petitioned for the death of Mary and of Norfolk, and at last, on 2 June 1572, Norfolk was executed on Tower Hill. The style Lord Maltravers is used as a courtesy title by the eldest son of the Duke's eldest son the Duke's grandson.

But Norfolk was not satisfied with dancing attendance on the queen, and his pride was hurt at the favours bestowed upon the , whom he regarded as a presumptuous upstart.

Ancient Biographical Poems, on The Duke of Norfolk, Viscount Hereford, The Earls

Elizabeth was embarrassed how to deal with Mary. Norfolk wrote from the Tower, assuring Elizabeth that he never dealt with any of the rebels, but he continued in communication with Mary, who after the collapse of the rising caught more eagerly at the prospect of escaping from her captivity by Norfolk's aid.

Duke of Norfolk

The opening months of 1569 seemed to be disastrous for Elizabeth in foreign affairs, and Cecil's forward policy awakened increasing alarm among the English nobles. Michael, an esteemed position which would cause them to spend a lot more time together.

Viscount Hereford

Norfolk was in favour with both Queen Mary and her successor, Elizabeth I. After his release under house arrest in 1570 and subsequent participation in the plot to enthrone Mary and Catholicism in England, he was executed in 1572 for treason and his lands and titles again became forfeit. Norfolk was reconciled to Cecil, and hoped to gain his help in urging on Elizabeth the advantages to be derived from such a settlement.
