Bilingualism

The SPPL Model and its processing mechanisms are based on assumptions that look at a very broad world of influences and factors that affect production of 16 Chapter One bilingual speech. In the new approach, specifically in their presentation of the 4-M Model, Myers-Scotton and Jake 2000 no longer speak about overall activation of the matrix language. SPPL and its processing mechanisms are used to account for: a sociopragmatic and psycholinguistic differences in these three bilingual phenomena; b the import of identity, contextual, and discourse functions in sociopragmatic CS; c directionality and triggering in psycholinguistic CS; and d differences among fluency, automaticity, and completeness in bilingual processing.
