Ryūgakuji Kofun Cluster

In addition to these six mounds, records indicate the presence of many more kofun in this area which have been destroyed due to urban encroachment, especially since residential land development began in the mid-1960s. It is estimated that thus tumulus had a length of 51 meters, with a rear circle diameter of 38 to 40 meters, and as with Kofun No.

Ryūgakuji Kofun Cluster

From this tumulus, small round-bottomed earthenware and iron artifacts have been excavated. There does not appear to have been a complete moat, but a groove was dug only in front of the anterior portion.

From these dates, it is clear that the tumulus-building culture continued well after the introduction of to the area in the as evidenced by the nearby ruins of the of. The pottery is the same as that excavated in various parts of Japan, as opposed to Kofun No. Comparing these premodern sources with modern manga will help us see some of the differences in the ways the tale has been adapted over the centuries and to consider some of the factors that contributed to new interpretations.
