DMU helps stage biggest

In one letter to a crazed female fan, he brags how he gets 50 letters a week, creepily asks at what age her breasts developed and claims he lost his virginity aged nine. How to build better prisons: New designs and a new look at their purpose The Government's plans to close Victorian gaols in towns isn't just a chance for urban redevelopment, it's an opportunity to build prisons on a more human scale, with natural light and better facilities. We hope that Art Aid will become a platform to share personal stories and sources of inspiration.

Our Impact The Impact of Arts in Prisons

It may be that we can reaffirm or reawaken a talent.

The London exhibition showcasing artwork made in UK prisons

The Learning Prison's emphasis was that prison surroundings may be spartan, but shouldn't be mentally and emotionally repressive. We want to spark interesting conversations about relevant topics, offer a platform for people to learn, and allow diverse voices to be heard. Even more recently, the Mas d'Enric Penitentiary near Tarragona, Spain, by AiB Estudi d'Arquitectes in 2013, is a low-rise campus of buildings with green rooftops and courtyards.

And what of the refurbishments of the 300-odd ageing Porridge-type jails? It's not for high category prisoners but, even so, the recidivism rate, claimed at a low 16 per cent, has caused much interest. The model draws upon a range of sources including desistance literature, self-determination theory, the impact of wellbeing on life outcomes and the results of studies and evaluations of our work. Our learners say education also has a positive impact on: Need There is a pressing need for our work.
