A Keepsake to honor Fredson Bowers

In 1948 Fred and a friend spent the summer travelling cross-country in an old ambulance they had outfitted for touring. One way that extended family, friends, and co-workers show their love and support in times of loss is by sending flowers and to the grieving family.

Vander Meulen

At age sixteen he entered Brown University, and upon graduation in 1925 he began graduate study at Harvard University. Assisted by a forceful personality, he was one of the most widely known and influential scholars of his day.

Fredson Bowers

This little figure strolling through our Grounds with his alpine hat, sometimes his cape, and always a very sporty coat or—or vest, with the students speaking to him, coming up into the English office, having his door open as he sat and students would drift by, occasionally coming in to read to him and to hear him talk about their writing, about his own. I was—I was delighted every time I met him.

Bowers, Fredson (1905)

He served on the board of The Stone Institute in Newton Upper Falls, and as treasurer was instrumental in the planning of The McLellan Rehabilitation and Skilled Nursing Center.

What did he used to talk to you about? That way, every time you pass by, you can find comfort in the familiar scent. Unfortunately, the entire set was lost when the Rotunda burned in 1895. His immense energy and quick expertise in the objects of his attention also found expression in fields other than academic ones.
