And yet, there is a solution which can meet all the above requirements — Dhan Vapasi.

Dhan Vapasi: The Treatment India needs to Recover from the Crisis

By implementing such training as part of your human resource strategy, they not only get to encourage diversity and gender equality in hiring processes but also benefit from the immense wealth of experience brought onboard by these women technologists. As another example of imperial rule, consider the existence of cantonments in India. BJP's Bengal unit held a high-powered organisational meeting on Tuesday where party leaders were required to be physically present and all three gave it a miss.

This return of public wealth must be universal because this surplus belongs to all, rich and poor alike. Against a backdrop of fear, uncertainty and doubt, people are cautious with their spending.

ThoughtWorks Vapasi Programme: Designed to bring women back into Technology

While such steps are laudable, there is still a need for more of women in tech, so that they do not have to compromise careers for family. So, what can the government do? Today, governments sitting in distant offices are deciding what is good for individual families. The pandemic has created an economic crisis that calls for bold actions.
