New York School of Career and Applied Studies

Students are most successful constructing meaning from texts for which they have background knowledge on which to build. Exceptional explanation and presentation of visual aids is characteristic of the advanced speaker. Combining them is the path to achieving the greatest success.

Three Elements of Great Communication, According to Aristotle

The third part of the definition we will unpack is ability to adapt to various contexts. A mindful communicator actively and fluidly processes information, is sensitive to communication contexts and multiple perspectives, and is able to adapt to novel communication situations.
