Robots exclusion The file, which usually lives in the main directory of a site, tells search robots which files and directories should not be indexed. The Deep Web furthers that debate by demonstrating what people can and will do to overcome political and social censorship. Databases offer vetted resources that must conform to an editorial standard and their content is not included in general-purpose search engines.

Going beyond Google: the invisible web in teaching and learning

By showing how research is done, it points out major flaws in researching practices among students, from grade school to college, and even into the professional world. Everyday Life Aids Pipl: People Search Pipl, sponsored by the search engine company of the same name, identifies itself as the most comprehensive people search on the web.
